PREFACE

This book originated as a hobby of the two compilers who had planned to compose for themselves and immediate family members a record of the ancestry of their grandparents, Hiram Craig Wallace and Julia Lawrence Frierson. In response to requests from more distantly related family members, many of whom shared family records they possessed, this has been expanded to include in Part V all the known descendants of both John Frierson (1777-1833) and William Jackson Wallace (1812-87).

Information given orally by persons contacted, some of whom were not positive about spelling or dates, to a 70 year old compiler with a hearing problem could easily result in a mistake. Often a name has many spellings, e.g. Stevan, Stefan, Stephen, Stephan. A grandson of a Burch spelled his name Birch. How many ways can Jonathan be spelled? Recognizing these obstacles, every name was checked and cross-checked. Many calls were made to verify a single name, date or fact. In spite of these efforts to assure accuracy it remains evident that some names and dates in Part V may be incorrect. For this, please accept apologies and regrets. It is incumbent upon the reader to correct any errors to his own satisfaction and for the benefit of his descendants. Space has been provided at the end of the book for corrections, notations and addenda.

The time and effort expended in preparing and publishing this family history has been well rewarded through the many new friendships that have been established. To those upon whose information and knowledge this work was built and to the many who freely contributed to the assembling of the statistics included in Part V: THANK YOU.

INTRODUCTION

The charts of this genealogy are based upon historic records of substance. Scholars recognize that the line that divides history from pre-history is blurred and that it occurred at different times in different places. The starting point for the charts in this study are the court and monastic annals, chronicles, king lists and genealogies that were maintained in many countries in the Dark Ages. Other records include official court biographies and family histories that were commissioned of historians such as William of Jumieges in the late Middle Ages. In the British Isles after the introduction of Christianity in the fifth century and the subsequent establishment of monasteries and their scriptoria there was a great proliferation of annals and chronicles which in turn had profound influence on record keeping among the Franks in the period of the Carolingian Renaissance. The most familiar documents in the British Isles include the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, Annales Cambriae, Brute y Tywysogion (Chronicles of the Princes of Wales), Annals of Tigernach, Annals of Ulster and the Book of Leinster. These are known today mainly through copies, redactions and compilations made at dates considerably later than the original recordings of them. Copies were made for wide dissemination of information and often only the copies have survived. Multiple recordings of events that occurred at various locales provide means of counter checking happenings and relative dating: some historians, such as Flann Mainistreach (d 1056), specialized in synchronization, i.e. correlating the dates of rulers and events in different kingdoms on the basis of the data recorded in diverse manuscripts. Obits in annals and chronicles provide an underpinning for dates in genealogies. After the cataclysm of the Norman Conquest in 1066 there was in the following two centuries strong interest in preserving, collecting and collating earlier records and in writing literary history.

Beyond the charts that have been set forth here are accounts that extend back to the legendary. From remote times there has been the desire of people of different parts of the world to accrue greatness to their tribe or country through the linkage of their rulers to the myths and gods of their culture. The Romans repeatedly fabricated genealogies of their rulers. The Emperor Vespasian, a man of humble stock, is said to have laughed at the incredible pedigree invented for him. As late as the thirteenth century Snorri Sturluson, the great Icelandic poet-historian, using sources such as Ari Thorgilsson, Thjodolf and the Skjoldunga Saga (Kings of Denmark), wrote his monumental Heimskringla (Lives of the Kings of Norway) in which he traced the ancestors of Norwegian King Harold Fairhair to the legendary Yngling kings of Uppsala in ancient Sweden who in turn were said to have been descended from the gods Frey or Yngni and Odin. Today the most familiar example of descent from divine origin is the Imperial House of Japan: the Emperor Hiroshito, according to Japanese tradition, is descended from the sun-goddess, Amaterasu.

Noachian and Adamitic Claims

In medieval Europe in countries where the shift from pagan religions to Christianity had taken place, a new element was introduced into the sometimes already improbable regnal genealogies: it became desirable to link the kings to Biblical genealogies. In the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, the most important continuous composite historical record in Europe in the Middle Ages, the evolution of regnal genealogy can be seen. Of the several extant copies of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, the oldest, Manuscript A, (also known as the Parker Chronicle after Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, who bequeathed it to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge) was written during the period of Alfred the Great (849-99) who is generally believed to have been the sponsor of its revival. All the entries covering the period from 849 to 891 were in the script of one writer and were probably recorded at Winchester, Alfred's capitol. The earliest material, i.e. prior to the period of Alfred and this unknown scribe, has been considered by scholars to have been based on pre-existing, now lost, sources. Manuscript A or a copy of it was sent to other monastic centers of learning in Britain where it was copied with modifications, omissions, interpolations and additions of local interest. The Chronicle began with the arrival in 494 AD of Alfred's ancestor, Cerdic, and his son, Cynric, with five ships, and traced their ancestry to the god Woden or Odin (king-lists of the royal houses of Bernica, East Angelia, Kent and Mercia also extended back to Woden). The pedigree was then traced forward from Cerdic, the first Wessex ruler, to Alfred with the number of years of each ruler's reign being given. In the entry in the Chronicle for the year 855, the line, again repeated generation by generation from Alfred to Woden, was followed by a sutured Old Testament genealogy: "...Woden of Frithowald, Frithowald of Frealaf, Frealaf of Frithuwult, Frithuwult of Finn, Finn of Godwulf, Godwulf of Geat, Geat of Taetwa, Taetwa of Beaw, Beaw of Sceldi, Sceldi of Heremod, Heremod of Itermon, Itermon of Hathra, Hathra of Gula, Gula of Bedwig, Bedwig of Sceaf, that is, the son of Noah, he was born in Noah's ark, Lamech, Mathusalem, Enoh, Jared, Malalabed, Cainion, Enos, Seth, Adam the first man . . ."

In Ireland where ancient genealogical records have existed in great abundance and where medieval religious fervor was intense, lines of Old Testament genealogies were extensively claimed. The legendary history of Ireland told of a series of settlements, each with a vast cast of characters, that dated from the Deluge. The last of the conquests was by the "Milecians," a people said to have come from Spain in the second millenium BC after having been in Scythia, Greece, Crete, Egypt, and Gothland. According to present day historians the Milecian invasion was a highly fictionalized version of the last Celtic colonization, the Goidelic (Gaelic) - the invasion that gave Ireland its language-which took place at an indeterminate time and possibly stretched from the first or second century BC to as late as the fifth century AD. The account of the Milecians, widespread in the Middle Ages, was accepted by many writers as late as the nineteenth century. The claim that Milecian "King Mil" was progenitor of the kingly lines of Ireland has been traced to Lebor Gabala Erenn (Book of the Conquest of Ireland). This hyperbolic history, as widespread and diverse in Ireland as the King Arthur cycles were to be in England in later centuries, in its early and simple version for which the date has been estimated as being the eighth century, gave "King Mil" two invader sons, Eber and Eremon. By the end of the ninth century he had six sons in some accounts. In still later manuscripts he had eight sons plus an uncle, Ith, who made an early exploration of Ireland after viewing it from a tower in Spain. Monastic scribes who copied and embroidered on Lebor Gabala made "King Mil" a descendant of Japhet, a son of Noah. Geoffrey Keating (ca 1570-1644) in his popular and extensively circulated History of Ireland, which was a free translation into Gaelic of material found in many Latin manuscripts, quoted sixteen lengthy genealogies which he called "The Branching of the Sons of Mil." For all these lines he claimed descent from "King Mil" and Adam.

In Scotland, the authentic genealogical history of the dynasty of kings ending with Alexander III (1241-86) was traced back through the Dal Riata kings (ca AD 500-850) of Argyll to their ancestral home in Dal Riata (co. Antrim), Ireland. Onto this legitimate genealogy chroniclers grafted the pervasive Adamitic lines of Ireland.

A vast wealth of genealogical records has long existed in Wales. Various manuscripts that delineated the ancestry of Llewellyn ab Iorworth and Rhodri Mawr to Coel Hen, King of Kyle (d ca 400) from whom Gwynedd and Ceredigion lines of Welsh kings descend, are considered historically valid. However, as in other instances in the British Isles, monastic scribes appended lines going back to Adam, this time some of them by way of classical mythology.

Primary Sources in Britain

After discounting the Noachian and Adamitic genealogies which still are being perpetuated in genealogical reference works such as O'Hart's Irish Genealogies and Virkus' Compendium of American Genealogy, the question remains as to with what certainty the early lines of the charts given herein have been extended back to their remote starting points. In this section source documents will be cited for the British Isles which have the richest collection of source material.

Saxon England

Of the chronicles of the Dark Ages that were being maintained in different locales, the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle is the most useful because of its system of dating. The common practice was to keep records by regnal years (names of ruler and number of years in his reign) or by indiction. The former method could be confusing to local scribes when synchronizing the record of their small kingdom with those of other kingdoms of the heptarchy where the rulers had reigns of different lengths, and incomprehensible to those abroad. The indiction method, recording by fifteen year cycles, derived from the Roman practice of reviewing taxes every fifteen years. This method was also perplexing since it was not always clear which cycle was being referred to. The same problem existed in Ireland where an 84 year cycle based on the Pascal (Easter) table was followed. In some manuscripts the unit of time was ten years. Still other arrangements were the stepping stone method ("four years later" - "one year after that") and figuring the number of years between two major happenings. Historians Gildas in the sixth and Nennius in the ninth century attempted to cope with the problem by dividing history into different eras. The fallacy of all these was that there was no common point of reference. Bede, in his brilliant Ecclesiastical History of the English People completed in 731, used the method devised earlier by the Syrian monk, Dionysius Exiguus, of numbering from the Incarnation. The Anno Domini chronological scheme, as used by Bede, the first historian to employ it, was also followed in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle and has since come to be adopted universally. That portion of the writing in the Chronicle which recorded contemporary events and genealogical data and which at the time of Alfred was in the memory of man, e.g. to Alfred's grandfather, King Egbert (r 802-39), affords a firm and incontestable starting point for the record of Saxon genealogy.

Leinster

More than any other country in the Dark and Middle Ages, Ireland had a multiplicity of genealogical records, many of which have yet to be translated. At the pyramidal base of the hierarchy of kingdoms were many small ones - scholars have estimated as many as 150 - for which the genealogies of their ruling houses were maintained. Byrne has stated that two manuscripts alone, covering the period of the fifth to the twelfth century, contained approximately 12,000 names.

In any locale where inheritance of governing power and property was dependent on proof of descent, genealogical records were essential. This was especially true in Ireland where the rule in different territorial kingships was based not on the simple system of primogeniture in which a kingdom could be inherited by an infant or imbecile but on tanistry, i.e. the election during a ruler's lifetime of successor (tanist) who could be any male descendant of a king within a given degree of kinship. Because eligibility was subject to controversy, the maintenance of complicated genealogical records was in the hands of professional learned men who were divided into seven grades. The highest, the ollam, having rank comparable to that of a bishop or petty king, were skilled not only in genealogy, synchronism and history but also in law and religion. For centuries their record keeping was through oral tradition. Historians and genealogists accept the validity of these oral genealogical records back to the fifth century AD. Eventually the genealogies were committed to writing in the scriptoria of monasteries where, as has been stated, Biblical genealogies to Noah and Adam were appended to the authentic lines. The time gaps between the rule of some fathers and sons on the Leinster and Dal Riata Kings of Scotland charts represent intervening years in which, in accordance with the tanist system, the rule was by other eligible male relatives.

The Book of Leinster, Annals of Tigernach, Annals of Ulster, and The Four Masters were all rich in genealogical records that relate to the charts herein. The Book of Leinster, of which almost four hundred pages in large folio vellum have survived, dated from the second half of the twelfth century and was typical of the compilations of the period. Using materials from earlier centuries, it began with Lebor Gabala Erenn (The Book of the Conquest of Ireland) and contained ancient poems, geography, topography, history (including some battles), chronology, saints and churches of early Ireland, genealogies and pedigrees, especially those of the kings of Leinster.

Dal Riata Kings of Scotland

The dynasty of the Dal Riata kings of Alba (Argyll) in Scotland derived from Ireland where the transition from pre-history to history was abruptly accomplished in the time of St. Patrick in the fifth century with the introduction of Christianity and written records. Noigiallach ("Niall of the Nine Hostages"), a layman contemporary to St. Patrick, became the overlord of north and central Ireland and the founder of the powerful Ui Neill dynasty at Tara. One of the small Ui Neill kingdoms was Dal Riata on the northeastern coast of Ireland (co. Antrim) only twelve miles across the Irish Sea from mainland Scotland. It was from there that a contingent of the Ui Neills, led by Fergus Mor Mac Erc and his brothers, immigrated about 489-503 to Argyllshire where they established Dal Riata settlements. Also in this area was the Isle of Iona where several decades later St. Columba founded his monastery which eventually was the object of Viking raids. Some forty-eight early kings of Scotland from the Dal Riatas to Duncan of Shakespearean fame were buried there. For about 150 years the Irish and Scottish Dal Riata were considered one kingdom. The events of the latter are well documented in Irish annals. In the middle of the ninth century the Scottish Dal Riatas united with the Picts under Fergus' descendant, King Kenneth MacAlpin (r 839-60), to form an approximation of present day Scotland. The amalgamation process evidently was a slow one based on conquest, expansion of the Dal Riatas, an extended period of Pictish domination, and intermarriage which probably facilitated the political union because of the Picts' practice of matrilineal inheritance. With unification, the royal seat was permanently moved to Scone, the Picts' capitol on the east coast. It was from there that Edward I removed the Stone of Scone (Lia Fail) to Westminister Abbey where it is embedded in the Coronation Chair. According to legend this stone was brought from Ireland at the time of Fergus. On it the Dal Riata kings and their descendants, the kings of united Scotland, were crowned.

Chronicles of the Picts, Chronicles of the Scots, a compilation by William F. Skene, consists of verbatum texts in original Latin, Welsh, Gaelic and Norman French - some with a parallel translation into English - of fifty medieval manuscripts containing king-lists and accounts of early history of the Dal Riatas and Picts. Among the manuscripts quoted are Tract of the Scots of Dal Riata, Book of Ballimote, Chronicles of the Scots, Annals of Tigernach, Duan Albanach, Chronicles of the Picts and Scots, Annals of Ulster and Synchronisms of Flann Mainistreach.

Wales

The genealogy of the Welsh Kingly Lines reproduced herein is but a small segment of lengthy lineages that extend back to the legendary. Coexistent in Wales in the Dark and Middle Ages were many small kingdoms. Among these there were intermarriages. The ancestry of Llewellyn ab Iorworth can be traced back through four major houses: Dyfed, Ceredigion, Powis and Gwynedd. Although the chart for Wales has been carried back only to the ninth century, the genealogical lines of the four named dynasties have been considered by historians to be reasonably accurate to Coel Hen in the fifth century AD.

Primary sources for these lines include manuscripts Hanes Gruffud ap Cynan (Rhodri Mawr - Coel Hen); Mostynn MS 117 (Llewellyn ab Iorworth - Rhodri Mawr), Annales Cambriae (years 444 AD to 977) and Welsh Genealogies in Historia Brittonum (Owain ap Hywel Dda back through both his father's and mother's lines), Achau Brenhinoedd a Thywysogion Cymru (Llewellyn ab Iorworth - Cunneda); and Jesus College MS 20 (Rhodri Mawr - Coel Hen).

Secondary Sources for the British Isles After the Norman Conquest

The charts for Parts I and II of lines before the Norman Conquest in 1066 illustrate that the ancestral roots of the Wallaces, Friersons and allied families go back to a wide range of geographic locales: Ireland to Kiev and Scandinavia to Spain, Italy and Jerusalem. By the thirteenth century nearly all the lines given in Part II had converged in the British Isles. With the exception of the French Huguenots, all the ancestors known to have immigrated to America from 1635 to the 1730's - to South Carolina, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Connecticut and Massachusetts - came from England, Scotland and Ireland.

In his six volume work Blood Royal of the Plantagenets published in 1907, Marquis de Ruvigny named 40,000 contemporaries with legitimate descent from Edward III (1312-77) who has been called the key to the Middle Ages. Genealogists have estimated that today Edward has at least 100,000 descendants in all social classes. Inversely, a person living in the twentieth century has a vast number of fourteenth century ancestors also in all social classes. However, inasmuch as registration of births, marriages, and deaths did not commence in the parishes of England until 1538, lines of nobility and royalty are essentially the only ones that can be documented prior to that time.

Skeletal bibliographical references are on the charts of Post-Conquest feudal families as aids to the reader in tracing and substantiating the highly complex relationships which are the result of a network of intermarriages of nobility after the Conquest. Approximately 180 nobles were recorded in the Domesday Book survey completed in 1086 by order of William the Conqueror, but by the fifteenth century the number of feudal lords was reduced to between forty and seventy. This decimated number was the result of death without issue, attainment and, most of all, the self-destruction in the War of Roses. In that conflict the nobility died in battling, executing and murdering their own kind as they fought in support of rival Lancastrian and Yorkish heirs/contenders to the throne. The insecure Tudors, successors to the Plantagenets, further reduced the nobility by executions on framed charges and through conspiracies.

When the dissident Barons met with King John and his supporters at Runnymede in 1215 to draw up and compel him to sign the Magna Charta they chose from their group twenty-five sureties or "Magna Charta Barons" seventeen are known to have present day descendants. It has been possible to authenticate descent of Hiram Craig Wallace and/or Julia Lawrence Frierson from thirteen of the seventeen Magna Charta Barons, seven Barons named in the Magna Charta who are known to have present day descendants, and from King John as well. In addition to the lines given for thirteen Magna Charta Barons, through some authorities descent has also been traced from Sureties Eustace de Vesci, William de Lanvalli and John FitzRobert; however, inasmuch as other authorities of equal repute contradict these lines, they have not been included in this work. An early death was common to the people of this class and period, the men from tournaments, warfare or Crusades, the women from childbirth and both from common disasters such as the Black Death. The surviving spouse customarily remarried within the same group and thus compounded intra-alliances. There were also close family ties to the Plantagenets, the Kings of Scotland and the Princes of Wales through marriages to these royal houses. Edward III alone had five sons and a daughter who married English nobility and many of the offspring of these alliances repeated the process. Today when a baron, viscount or marquis is formally addressed by the Crown it is with the ancient phrase, "Our Right and Entirely Beloved Cousin" an expression that goes back to the time when the nobility of England was indeed cousin to the king.

By way of illustration of the inbred character of this group attention is directed to the fact that in these charts four lines of descent have been traced from Hugh de Kevelioc, Earl of Chester, through his four daughters; three lines from William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, through three of his daughters; three lines each from the children, legitimate and illegitimate, of Kings John, Edward I and Henry II; two lines each from Geoffrey Plantagenet and Roger de Mortimer IV, Earl of March; and from conquerors and those they conquered in essentially every major and minor military and political contest of the time in Britain. This class also shared ancestral connections and alliances to families of the same rank on the Continent. Many of the Magna Charta Barons and their wives (Appendix A) claimed descent from Charlemagne. The relatively obscure Raymond Berenger V of Provence had four daughters who became queens: Eleanor of Provence, Queen of England; Marguerite of Provence, Queen of France; Beatrice, Queen of Hungary-Naples; and Sancha, Queen of the Romans. Descent has been traced from all except Sancha who died without issue.

In America in the twentieth century ancestral lines to the Magna Charta Barons have been enthusiastically studied by genealogists. In the first half of the century several ambitious works were published including The Magna Charta by John S. Wurtz and Magna Charta Barons and Their American Descendants by Charles H. Browning. Because of the complexity of the subject much of the early research has been discredited.

The main reference works that have been used herein for the Post-Conquest period are Complete Peerage (CP); Scots Peerage (SP); Dictionary of National Biography (DNB); Burke, A Genealogical History of the Dormant, Abeyant, Forfeited and Extinct Peerages (B-D&E); Burke's Peerage and Barontage B-P&B); and Burke's Guide to the Royal Family (B-RF). CP contains exhaustive documentation. SP and DNB make scholarly use of source materials. B-D&E is invaluable for tracing the demise of the Anglo-Norman peerages and B-P&B, although not documented, because of the editing of its 105 editions (as of 1975) is widely accepted as an authority of the ancestry of present day peers. The latter also contains a wealth of genealogical data pertaining to the four centuries following the conquest. The genealogy of the Royal Family has been exhaustively researched by scholars. Ancient lines in the present record that are identical to those in B-RF include: Kings of All England (Saxon Kings), Anglo-Danish Kings of England (Harold), Kings and Queens of England and Great Britain since the Conquest (William the Conqueror - Edward III), Kings and Queens of Scotland (Alpin - William the Lion, the Bruces and Stewarts), Princes of Wales (Rhodri Mawr - Llewellyn ab Iorworth) and, on the Continent, the Dukes of Normandy and the House of Anjou. B-RF omits reference to Irish roots. Most genealogies of Queen Elizabeth II, however, usually include her descent from the line of Brian Boru (King of Ireland 1002-14) - Dermot MacMurrough (King of Leinster, d 1171). In this study this line is shown on the chart, Kings of Leinster: Wexford and Carlow.

Although Domesday Book was a documentary record of England at a major turning point in its history and while there were extensive records of royalty and aristocracy in the era of feudalism, the Conquest itself was unsatisfactorily chronicled. There has been much disagreement among scholars about the participants and their roles. For lack of precise information about them, historians came to refer to them as "Companions of the Conqueror." While it has been noted on the charts given herein that particular individuals were participants in the Conquest, this information has been given with qualification. William of Poictiers, chaplain to William the Conqueror, wrote the only eyewitness account of the Conquest in Gesta Guilielme ducis (Deeds of Duke William). Unfortunately, he was more concerned with praising his patron than with recording history. His statement in translation from the Latin about those who were at Hastings was a brief one: "There were present in this battle Eustace, Count of Boulogne; William, son of Richard, Count of Evereux; Geoffrey, son of Retrou, Count of Mortain; William FitzOsborn; Haimo, Vicomte of Thouars; Walter Gifford; Hugh of Monford-sur-Risle; Rodolf of Tosny; Hugh de Grantesmesnil; William de Warrenne; and many others most renowned Warriors whose names are worthy of commemoration in history as soldiers bravest of all time." Of these, Hugh de Grantesmesnil and William de Warrenne appear on these charts. Elsewhere in the same work, William of Poictiers stated that William the Conqueror directed William Malet, ancestor of Magna Charta Surety of the same name, to "enshroud" King Harold. Modern scholars like David C. Douglas and L. G. Pine, who for many years was editor of Burke's Peerage and Baronetage, have extended this list to between thirty and forty names. Persons on these charts who are designated as "Conquest 1066" are from these listings and from the much more extensive - but questionable - Falaise, Battle Abbey and Dives Rolls. The other important contemporary record of the Conquest was the Bayeux Tapestry. Among the few individuals pictured who were identified, other than William the Conqueror and King Harold, was Guy, Count of Ponthieu, who delivered Harold to William when the former and his entourage landed on the coast of Ponthieu.

European Continent: Primary Sources

Frankish Lines

Historia regum Francorum (History of the Kings of the Franks) by Gregory of Tours (539-94) was not only the single contemporary history of the Merovingian period in Gaul but, along with Bede's Historia Ecclesiastica, was the greatest historical work in the Latin West after the debacle of the Roman Empire until the Carolingian Renaissance in the ninth century. As bishop of the most important see in Gaul, which by then was the supreme power in Western Europe, Gregory saw more of the Merovingian rule at close range than any other chronicler of his time. The first two of his ten volume history dealt with the period ending with the death of Clovis in 511 and gave a richly detailed account of the political and social history of the sixth century.

The era after Gregory of Tours and Bede (d 735) was one of the continent's darkest ages in intellectuality and writing. The only sequel to Historia regum Francorum was Fredegarius, an uneven chronicle by three anonymous compilers covering the period from the first Mayors of the Palace to the accession of Pepin in 768. The first part was based on earlier and current tracts and was the most important, though inadequate, authority on the fall of the decadent Merovingian kings and the rise of the Mayors of the Palace.

In the brilliant Carolingian Renaissance in the eighth and ninth centuries Frankish culture was vitalized by contact with the intellectual activities in England. Charlemagne, who fostered scholarship in his Palace School and made learning a fashion in the court, required that every monastery keep an annal of the activities of its precinct. The Carolingian rule is understandably one of the most thoroughly documented reigns in the Dark Ages. Annal writing continued to flourish among the Franks after the disintegration of the empire and the incursions of the Vikings in the ninth century. Although a great many manuscripts were destroyed by the Vikings, a considerable number has been preserved.

Foremost among the records of the Carolingian period were Annales Laurisenses (741-829) from Lorsch monastery in Mainz. Called the "Royal Annals" and semi-official in character, they were the work of a number of writers including Charlemagne's secretary and biographer, Einhard, and the former's son-in-law, Angilbert, who was a lay abbot. Angilbert's son, Nithard, the only layman historian before the Crusades, wrote Historiarum libri quatuor (Four Books of History) in which he covered the complicated events and successions in the partition of the empire. He had access to court documents and used them with skill.

Scandinavia

Snorri Sturluson (1178-1241), the great Icelandic poet-historian, in his Heimskringla (History of the Kings of Norway) covered Scandinavia from pre-history to his own era, including the events and activities of Scandinavians in Iceland, Ireland, England, Normandy, Denmark, Uppsala, Byzantium, Greece, Sicily and Jerusalem as well as in Norway.

In most countries the use of poetry as a historical source would be highly questionable. In Scandinavia, where conversion to Christianity and the introduction of writing were late developments (annals in Latin were begun by clerics in the late ninth century), the skaldic poetry, a subject on which Snorri was an authority, was the traditional means of preserving history. Snorri remarked in his introduction that while the skalds might not be infallible on details inasmuch as their task was to compose accounts flattering to their kingly patrons, since the poetry was recited before gatherings of chieftains the facts needed to be basically true or they would have been widely disclaimed. In the same way the Thucydides depended on Homer as a source of pre-history, Snorri used the genealogical poem Ynglingatel (Enumeration of the Yngling Kings) by King Harold Fairhair's skald, Thjotholf of Hvinir, who listed in the work thirty generations and described how they died and where they were buried. Others of Snorri's multitudinous sources included Saemund the Learned (1045-1133), who wrote about the lives of kings from Halfdan the Black to Magnus the Great, and two anonymous Norwegian clerics who wrote Historia de antiguitate regum Norwagiensium, an account of Norwegian kings from Harold Fairhair to the death of Sigur the Jerusalemfarer, and Historia Norwegiae, an extended continuous history of Norway with much information about tributary lands. Snorri stressed his indebtedness to Thorgilisson the Learned (1067-1148), the first to write Scandinavian history in the vernacular. Along with utilizing available manuscripts and source material, Ari recorded the recollections of elderly persons with strong memories and related the events in his history to the dates established in English annals. One of his works, Isendingabok, now lost but undoubtedly used by Snorri, contained genealogies and lives of Norwegian kings.

Russia

Provest' Vremennykn Let or The Primary Chronicle, known as "Nestor's Chronicle" because it was for a long time attibuted to Nestor (1056-1114), a monk at the Pechersk monastery at Kiev, was the earliest source for Russian history and the genealogy of the Grand Princes of the Ruric Dynasty. According to the Chronicle, thought by scholars to be a twelfth century product based on earlier records, in the year 862 AD Scandinavian Viking traders, called Varangians or Rus, under the leadership of Ryurik established themselves in Novgorod. Imperial Russia, in recognition of this date as the beginning of the Russian state, celebrated its millenium anniversary in 1862. Nothing is known of the Varangians prior to their arrival in Russia. It was through Ingergard, wife of Prince Jaraslav (d 1054) of the Ruric Dynasty and the daughter of King Olaf Skottkonumg of Sweden, that genealogical connection was made to that area. In "Saga of St. Olaf," chapter 94 in Heimskringla, Snorri Sturluson compared Ingergard to her half sister, Queen Astrid of Norway, daughter of King Olaf and a thrall woman, as red gold is to clay. Ingergard, he wrote, "is kingly born on all sides of the Uppsala race which is uppermost of the northern land, for this stock is come from the gods themselves."

Doges of Venice

The oldest historical record of Venice, the Chronicon Venetum, was written in three parts in different periods of time. The first two sections covering the period 630-1012 AD, written by Giovanni Sagoninus, a chaplain of Doge Pietro Orseolo II (r 991-1008), were mainly a listing of the early doges and patriarchs of the Grado. The third part, a chronicle of Altino which was about the period of 1012-1220 AD, contained a list of the great patrician families of Venice.

Dukes of Normandy and Counts of Anjou

In France about 994 AD, Richard I, the first Duke of Normandy, commissioned Dudo of St. Quentin to write De Moribus et Actis Priorum Normandiae Ducum (History of the Dukes of Normandy). The record went back two generations to Rollo (Ganger-Hrolf), the Norse chieftain who was later the First Duke of Normandy, under whom the Vikings invaded northwestern France ca 890-910. By treaty with King Charles the Simple in 911, the Vikings received Rouen and adjacent territory subsequently known as Normandy or Land of the Northmen. Gesta Normannorum Ducum (Deeds of the Dukes of the Normans), written ca 1070 by William of Jumieges, incorporated material from Jumieges Abbey. Snorri Sturluson in Heimskringla ("Saga of Harold Fairhair," chapters 10 and 24) traced the ancestry of William the Conqueror, sixth Duke of Normandy, through their Norman line of Rollo to Norse ancestor Eyestein Glumra, Jarl of More, in the early ninth century.

Gesta consulum Andegavensium (Deeds of the Counts of Anjou), a history that was started in 1107, was followed by Historia comitum Andegavensium in the twelfth century.

European Continent: Secondary Sources

The lines given for the Continental Europe fall into two categories: those that, being historical facts of common knowledge (Carolingian and Capetian Dynasties, and Hungary-Naples), need no verification and lesser known lines that require substantiating evidence. For some of the latter (the Frankish, Scandinavian, Russian, Venetian, Norman and Angevin) source materials have been indicated. For more obscure and less documented lines (Namur, Ponthieu, Geneva, etc.) it has been necessary to rely on secondary sources many of which are the products of modern research and vary in quality. The latter range from scholarly works such as Previte-Orton's The Shorter Cambridge Medieval History and O'Callaghan's A History of Medieval Spain, used for the Iberia and Asturian Kings charts, to genealogical studies such as Turton's The Plantagenet Ancestry.

American Lines

The tracing of remote European lines in American libraries presented problems that were few in comparison to following American ancestral lines from the 17th to the 19th century. The former, nobility and royalty in distant times, were extensively recorded in regnal lists, annals, chronicles, genealogies and histories. In contrast, ancestors who immigrated from 1635 to the final immigrants in the 1730's were religious dissidents, the usual quota of adventurers, and persons of modest circumstances some of whom, however, were sufficiently prosperous to come to the colonies in large family groups. The family of Thomas Lawrence - his stepfather, mother (Joan [Antrobus] Lawrence Tuttle), grandmother, and seven brothers and sisters - immigrated to New York in 1635. Elizabeth (Woods) Wallace, a widow with five children of ages 5 to 18, immigrated with her brothers and their families to Pennsylvania in 1724 then moved in about 1733 to Rockbridge County, Virginia, west of present day Charlottesville. The three generations of the Campbell family - between 15 and 20 in number - that immigrated in 1726 were part of the same Scotch-Irish pattern: Scotland-Ulster-Pennsylvania-Virginia.

Along with seeking religious freedom, opportunity and security these families participated in the development of their pioneer communities. The Campbell family attained eminence in Virginia and Tennessee. Families such as the Campbells, because of their accomplishments and alliances, were easily traced. Many other families - Betts, Hunt, Leggett, Logan, Burch, Craig, Tate, Frierson and Parker - required tedious research that began with checking ship passenger lists and progressed to a wide range of records including military, pensions, church, land transactions, family Bibles, wills, maps, censuses, tombstones and unpublished materials. Sometimes the trail was faint. Persons moving into a new pioneer area, such as Missouri in 1817, preceded the establishment of churches and extensive public records. They usually maintained family vital statistics in family Bibles, many of which have long since disappeared. The U.S. Census listed women and children by name for the first time in 1850. The National Archives in Washington does not have complete records of the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812 and many Confederate units.

Charles Hamilton Young, the compiler, not only did research at libraries and depositories such as the Library of Congress, the Latter Day Saints Archives in Salt Lake City, and the state, county and city libraries, historical societies and public record offices in Mississippi-South Carolina-Pennsylvania triangle, but conducted similar research in Missouri, New Mexico and Louisiana. Major similar institutions in Texas and Seattle were used as home bases. In bringing the records of the descendants of William Jackson Wallace (1812-87) and John Frierson (1777 - 1833) up to date he sought their present day descendants by telephone, correspondence and travel. In many instances they were no longer in areas where their immediate families were known to have lived twenty-five to a hundred years ago. Locating their present whereabouts involved checking tax lists, voter registrations and automobile records and seeking former neighbors for information.

When distant peer relatives were finally contacted, he often found that they had family records for several generations. Occasionally the record was the kind of find that a genealogist always hopes to discover. Two such documents were those of L. S. Frierson and Dr. John S. Wallace.

Lorraine Screven Frierson (1861-1936), a cousin of Julia Lawrence (Frierson) Wallace, was the proprietor of the Ravenwood and Lakeville Plantations of Frierson, La. These are owned today by his descendants. Mr. Frierson had two hobbies that he pursued with dedication and ability. As an amateur conchologist he gained international recognition for his research and writing on fresh water mussels. His second interest was genealogy. In his last years, being ill and almost blind, he worked with urgency to complete his research on the Frierson and allied families. When Charles Young contacted L. S. Frierson, Sr.'s son, L. S. Frierson, Jr., and his granddaughter, Jane (Nicholson) Maxwell, he found that they had in their possession the unpublished record he had compiled, including much documentation. Research on Frierson origins in South Carolina had been frustrating inasmuch as, according to Mouzon's map of 1775, there were four Frierson families coexistent along the Santee River. The fact that each generation of each branch usually had had at least one John further compounded the problem. Miss Margaret McElveen, an instructor in genealogy at Sumter College, theorized that the Frierson family that lived on the south side of the Santee River was the ancestral line of the Friersons who emigrated to Louisiana. Her prognostication was borne out by Mr. Frierson's record. The legal documents he cited, including a land deed signed by Elizabeth (Richebourg?) Frierson, dated 1756 but heretofore overlooked because it was not recorded for 65 years, verified the record that he set forth.

In Missouri, Dr. John Snoddy Wallace, Jr. (1849-1916), a nephew of William Jackson Wallace, did extensive research of the Wallace and allied families that migrated there from Kentucky beginning ca 1817/19. Unfortunately, his collection of books, manuscripts and documents was lost in a fire two weeks before his death. In the 1930's and 1940's his family and a friend, Sam S. Sargeant, undertook to collect his correspondence and fragments of his writings and added family documents and records. His niece, Charlotte (Head) Gray, a regent of a DAR chapter in Missouri, wrote notes and commentaries on this compilation. Paul Horn of Farmington, New Mexico, had this unpublished manuscript in his possession and made it available for this record.

The L. S. Frierson and John S. Wallace documents for decades have been preserved by their direct and collateral descendants. With the permission of these descendants copies of these papers have now been deposited in archival collections in Louisiana, Texas, South Carolina and Missouri (see Bibliography).

Besides the two foregoing compilations, other significant miscellaneous papers were shared by their owners.

The late Harriet Lou (Hooker) Casebeer of Chillicothe, Missouri, for years was the focal point for family information about the descendants of William J. Wallace. She did a considerable amount of genealogical research on the Wallace family, kept in touch with family members and accumulated chests of Wallace memorabelia. This treasure was inherited by her daughter, Margaret Casebeer, who gave free access to all material.

Robert de Treville Lawrence of The Plains, Virginia, and Charleston whose article, "Family Bibles of Lawrence Brothers of Charleston," was printed in The South Carolina Historical Magazine in 1952 shared copies that he possesses of the Bibles of Jonathan and Stephen Lawrence. These Bibles of two of the three brothers who emigrated from New York to Charleston in the 1770's contain family data from the eighteenth of the twentieth century.

Elizabeth (Harleston) Daniell of Charleston donated the correspondence of her late husband, E. Roy Daniell, and the late York Lowry Wilson, of Washington, D. C. The latter was author of A Carolina-Virginia Genealogy which was published in 1962. The letters of these two men who never met afford a revealing testament of their research in Charleston, Washington and England on their ancestor-in-common, Governor/Landgrave Robert Daniell, and his first wife, Dorothy (Chamberlayne) Daniell, who are shown on these charts.

PART V

DESCENDANTS OF JOHN FRIERSON (1777-1833)

DESCENDANTS OF WILLIAM JACKSON WALLACE (1812-1887)

DESCENDANTS OF JOHN FRIERSON, 1777-1833

Starting with John Frierson (1777-1833) as Generation I, each successive generation of all his known descendants is designated by the addition of one number. This numeral also represents the individual's chronological position of birth in relation to his siblings:

> Example: 1-11-4-6-2 is the number for the second child (in Generation V) of the sixth child (in Generation IV) of the fourth child (in Generation III) of the eleventh child (in Generation II) of John Frierson (Generation I).

Children whose names precede other information or dates have no known descendants and are not listed in the following generation.

DESCENDANTS OF WILLIAM JACKSON WALLACE 1812-87

Starting with William J. Wallace (1812-87) for Generation I, each successive generation of all his known descendants is designated by the addition of one number. This number also represents that individual's chronological position of birth in relation to his siblings:

> Example: 1-11-4-6-2 is the number for the second child (in Generation V) of the sixth child (in Generation IV) of the fourth child (in Generation III) of the eleventh child (in Generation II) of William J. Wallace (Generation I).

Children whose names precede other information or dates have no known descendants and are not listed in the following generation.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES ON AMERICAN ANCESTORS

Seventeenth Century English Colonists in New York

In 1623, two years after the Dutch East India Company was chartered, Dutch colonists were sent to New Amsterdam. Three years later Director General Peter Minuit made his famous purchase of Manhattan Island from Indian sachems. Sparse Dutch settlements were established at the western section of Long Island specially at Breuckelen (Brooklyn). English from Massachusetts and Connecticut filtered southward, crossed Long Island Sound and occupied land in the central and eastern parts of Long Island. English were also permitted to settle in the western portion of the island provided they took an oath of allegiance to the Dutch government. In 1650 because of growing dissension between Dutch and English colonists a treaty was drawn designating a longitudinal division of the island from Oyster Bay to the Atlantic: this separated the areas occupied in the main by Dutch and English. In 1664 the Dutch rule ended and Long Island became part of the British Province of New York.

Seventeenth century English ancestors in New York were original patentees of present day Queens and Bronx Boroughs and Westchester County.

Betts

Captain Richard Betts (1613-1713), who was born in Hemel Hempstead, Hertford, England, and his wife, Joanna Chamberlain, immigrated to Ipswich ca 1646-48. In 1652 they sold their Ipswich home and by 1656 had moved to the Mespat area of Queens County, Long Island. He served as a member of the First British Colonial Assembly in 1664, Justice 1650, High Sheriff of Yorkshire 1678-81, Delegate to New York Assembly 1683 and Delegate to the New York Convention 1689. When Richard Betts attained the age of 100 years he stated it was time to die and dug his own grave. A short time later he died.

Hunt

Thomas Hunt (d 1694), who was in Stamford, Connecticut, in 1650, moved to Westchester County, New York, in 1652. There he was the original patentee of Grove Farm which was located on the peninsula at the southeastern end of Westchester.

Thomas Hunt (ca 1640-1718), through his wife, Elizabeth Jessop, daughter of one of the two original patentees of West Farms, inherited one-half interest in the Bronx property. On Hunt's Point, a promontory in the East River, he built a house in 1688. This house which was still standing in 1912 was at that time in a dilapidated condition.

Jessop

Edward Jessop (1596-1666) and his brother, John, immigrated prior to 1649 to Stamford, Connecticut. In 1652 when Governor Stuyvesant granted the English permission to colonize the western end of Long Island, fifty-five English bought land from the Indians for a shilling per acre. Jessop purchased one of the two largest tracts; for this he paid four pounds.

Jessop had amicable relations with both the Dutch and English authorities and positions of responsibility under both governments. By appointment of the Dutch he served as magistrate 1659-62. He and Richard Betts were appointed to see that taxes were paid to the Dutch. In 1665 over 500 Indians plundered Manhattan in the three day "Peach War." Edward Jessop who was in Manhattan at the time of the attack was a leader in the defense.

When Long Island came under English rule, Jessop, who had large land holdings, was given grant to them by the Crown. In 1663-64 he was magistrate of Westchester by English appointment. In 1664 he and John Richardson bought from nine Indians a large tract which they called West Farms because it was located west of Westchester. On old maps West Farms was shown as a triangular area bounded by Westchester, Morrisiana and the East River. Today this location is that section of the Bronx that is approximately across the East River from La Guardia Airport.

Edward Jessop's will, one of the first recorded in the English language in this area, named his daughter, Elizabeth Hunt; his granddaughter, Mary Hunt; Sara Bridges; his brother-in-law, John Burrows (Burroughs) and others. This has led some to think that his wife, Elizabeth, was named Bridges but most authorities believe that her name was Burroughs.

Leggett

Gabriel Leggett (ca 1635/38-99) according to Compendium of American Genealogy, immigrated in 1640. At that date he would have been a small child. No record has been found of the immigration of his parents.

Through his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Martha (Mead) Richardson, Leggett came into possession of the westerly portion of the Jessop-Richardson tract (West Farms) including Baretta's Point. Gabriel and Elizabeth (Richardson) Leggett's son, John Leggett (1677-1707), who was born at West Farms, was one of the proprietors of Planting Neck.

Richardson

John Richardson, who in 1664 purchased West Farms with Edward Jessop, died in 1679. In his will he left his houses and land to his wife, Martha, for her lifetime. Following her death 1694/5 the property, after some litigation, was divided among two surviving daughters and the heirs of a third daughter who was deceased.

Stevenson

Thomas Stevenson immigrated to Stamford, Connecticut, ca 1644. In 1645 he married Maria Bernard, widow, in the Dutch Reformed Church of New York. He owned property at Southold and in 1651 acquired the Van der Donck farm at Flushing Bay at Newtown where he remained until he died ca 1668.

Whitehead

Daniel Whitehead immigrated in 1647 and in 1650 purchased property at Smithtown, Long Island. He later located at Mespat Kills and in 1668, the year he died, was one of the seven patentees of Newtown, a 26 square mile area in the vicinity of present day Forest Hills.

Major Daniel Whitehead (1646-1704) married Abigail, daughter of Thomas Stevenson, and settled at Jamaica, Long Island. Major Whitehead was magistrate of Queens County and from 1691 until his death he served as a representative in the Colonial Assembly. In his will he bequeathed extensive properties in Jamaica, Hempstead, Flushing, Quaspack (Orange County), and Oldfield Island to various members of his large family.

Lawrence

The line of this family is extraordinary in that the lineal male descent extends without break from Sir Robert Lawrence (ca 1155-1216) to present day male descendants in South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, New York and other states. One of this line, Jonathan Lawrence (III) (d 1782 in the American Revolution) was the great-grandfather of Julia Lawrence Frierson. The progenitor of the line, Sir Robert Lawrence of Ashton Hall in Lancastershire was knighted by Richard the Lion Hearted when at the siege of Acre in 1191 he planted the crusaders' banner on the battlements. Sir Robert's grandson, Sir James Lawrence, married Matilda De Wessington (Washington) in the reign of Henry III and his great-great-great grandson, Edward (d 1381), married Agnes de Washington.

Lawrence

LAWRENCE AND WASHINGTON

The quartered Lawrence and Washington coat of arms was on a seal used on documents by members of the Lawrence family in the colonial period in New York and, according to Thomas Lawrence's Historical Genealogy of the Lawrence Family (1858), silver plate with the coat of arms was still, at the date of the publication of his book, in the possession of Lawrence descendants. From the time of the second intermarriage of the two families the Lawrence name was perpetuated in the Washington family. George Washington, who inherited Mount Vernon from his half brother, Lawrence Washington, was the grandson of Lawrence Washington of Virginia (d 1697); the great-great-grandson of Rev. Lawrence Washington, Rector of Purleigh (d 1652), and great-great-great grandson of Lawrence Washington of Sulgrave (d 1616).

Major Thomas Lawrence, Junior (reckoned as Generation I in the American line), the son of Thomas and Jean (Antrobus) Lawrence, was christened at St. Albans, Herfordshire, England, in 1620. After the death of Thomas Lawrence, Senior, in England, Jean married John Tuttle. The Tuttle-Lawrence-Antrobus family, except Thomas (I), immigrated from St. Albans on the Planter in 1635. Thomas (I) came to the colonies by mid-century; the first notice of him was in New Haven in August 1651. In 1666 he bought a patent from Governor Dongan for all of Hell Gate Neck on the East River from Bowery Bay to Hell Gate Cove. He was listed in 1690 as Thomas Lawrence, Major of Horse for Queens County, in charge of defense of the King's subjects in Southold, Long Island. The surname of his first wife, Mercy, who was the mother of his children, is not known. His will named five sons, a daughter, a granddaughter and his second wife, Mary.

Thomas Lawrence's two brothers, John and William, who immigrated with twenty-one members of the extended family in 1635, were patentees of Flushing, Long Island, in 1645. In 1658 John moved to New Amsterdam where in 1665 he, when New York was incorporated, was one of the first aldermen, twice its mayor, a member of His Majesty's Council and from 1692 until his death in 1699 a judge in the Supreme Court. His granddaughter, Mary Whittinghame, a benefactress of Harvard and Yale Colleges, became the wife of Gordon Saltonstall, governor of Connecticut. William, who owned Lawrence's or Tew's Neck, was the largest landed proprietor of Flushing. After his death, his wife, Elizabeth Smith (Smithtown, Long Island, was the home of her family), married Sir George Carteret, governor of New Jersey, who named Elizabeth, New Jersey, after her. In Sir George's absence, she administered the colony.

Jonathan Lawrence (I) (d bef 1720) lived in Westchester County, New York.

Jonathan Lawrence (II) (1695-1777) and his wife, Mary Betts, moved across the Hudson River of Rockland County where about 1749 he purchased the ancestral seat of the Ludlow family on the Hudson in present day Palisades, New York, about 30 miles below the United States Military Academy at West Point. The house, built by Henry Ludlow about 1729, is still standing but has been considerably altered. All of the old part of the village in which it is situated was in 1968 designated as a Historic District. Traditionally the structure has been called The Big House. For several years the Palisades Library was quartered in the house which again is a private residence. When the library collection was moved in 1944, a wealth of material - maps, diaries, deeds, manuscripts, genealogies, pictures, 19th century photographs - all of great local historic interest was found stored in closets and cupboards. The Palisades Library owns a drop-leaf mahogany table which has a plaque:

"At this table General Washington is said to have dined in
The Big House Palisades Rockland Co. N.Y.
during the Revolutionary War."

Thomas Lawrence (II) (1718-80) and his wife, Helena Leggett, both descended from Long Island settlers, had six sons. He was buried in the Lawrence Cemetary in Rockland County.

Jonathan (III), Stephen, and Samuel Lawrence, the sons of Helena (Leggett) and Thomas Lawrence (II) and the great-great-grandsons of immigrant Major Thomas Lawrence (I), about 1774 emigrated from New York to Charleston. In their separate family Bibles they and their descendants maintained records of the births, marriages and deaths of the South Carolina families they founded.

Jonathan (III) in 1774 at the age of 24 was the joint purchaser with three others of a distillery in Charleston for £4,000. Three years later he bought out one of his partners for £6,000 and the same year he purchased a brick house on the Bay of Charleston for £10,050. In 1777 he married Sarah Daniell, the daughter of Robert Daniell (IV) and the great-great-granddaughter of Governor/Landgrave Robert Daniell (I). In 1782 at the age of 33, Jonathan Lawrence died intestate of wounds received in the American Revolution in which he, sergeant-major who served under Francis Marion, was twice captured by the British. His first escape prompted the British, even though he was seriously wounded, to imprison him aboard a ship away from shore. This precaution was not sufficient to prevent his second escape in which he reached shore. He was cared for by a family until he died from his wounds. He was buried in the churchyard of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church at Cainhoy. His widow, Sarah, died 60 years later and was buried beside him. The fortune of Jonathan Lawrence (III) was also a casualty of the Revolutionary War. In 1838 Sarah applied for a widow's pension on the basis of her husband's military service. Four years later she postumously was granted a pension of $25.00 per year.

Jonathan and Sarah (Daniell) Lawrence's daughter, Elizabeth Helena Lawrence (b 1781), married Samuel Parker of Charleston. They were the grandparents of Julia Lawrence (Frierson) Wallace.

Seventeenth Century English Colonists in Maryland and Pennsylvania

In addition to the considerable number of English ancestors who settled in New England beginning in 1635, several ancestral families came to Maryland and Pennsylvania from England beginning at least as early as the 1690's.

Baker

About 1719 Robert Baker and his son, Caleb, who are on record as being among the English settlers of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, purchased 500 acres on the Susquehanna. This land was rich in iron ore which they processed in a foundry they built on the site. National Geographic attributes to Robert, who had a commission from the Crown to manufacture arms for the colonies, and to Caleb the invention in 1726 of the Pennsylvania Rifle later known as the Kentucky rifle. For twenty years the Bakers were the only manufactures of this rifle which by 1800 had been manufactured by 115 gunsmiths in Lancaster County.

Caleb Baker (1690-1754) sold the rifle plant and became part of the Scotch-Irish migration from Pennsylvania to Virginia. In 1742-43 he purchased 1400 acres in Amelia (now Prince Edward County) where in 1754 his will was the first in the county to be probated.

Burch

In her exhaustive research on the Burch family in America and Europe, Marilu Burch Smallwood traced the lineage of the family to Jean de Bourg, the first to use the surname, who in 11th century Flanders was a 7th generation descendant of Charlemagne. Her study of the onomastics of the name indicate a wide variety of spellings including de Burgh, de Burgo, Burgoyne, Bourke, Burke, Byrd, Birch and Burch.

Oliver Burch (1646-1729) was an original landowner in Charles County, Maryland, in 1695. He and his wife, Barbary/Barbara Scott had eleven children.

Jonothon Burch was born 1707 in Charles County and died ca 1786 in Prince George County, Maryland. He and his wife, Elizabeth, were listed in the 1776 census of St. John's and Prince George Parishes. He was the owner of numerous tracts of land including Mill Dam, Plemoth (Plymouth), Mt. Pleasant, and Burch's Venture.

Benjamin Burch, born 1753 in Prince George County, inherited the Mill Dam and Plymouth properties from his father. He was a sergeant in the American Revolution in the 3rd Regiment Maryland Line. In 1810 he moved to Kentucky where in 1830 he died in Breckinridge County. Benjamin Burch was married three times and had children by each wife.

Jonothon Titus (Tytus) Burch, son of Benjamin and his second wife, Mary Townsend, was born in Maryland in 1790, lived in Kentucky and migrated from there to Missouri where he married Mary Jane Craig.

Townsend (Townshend) and Pyles (Piles, Pile)

Samuel Townsend (1714-1804), who was born in London, immigrated to Prince George County, Maryland, in 1736. He married Ann Pyles, daughter of Leonard Pyles, by whom he had 10 children.

Leonard Piles, son of Francis Piles, Sr., was named in the latter's will of 1726.

Samuel Townsend and Leonard Pyles both signed the Oath of Fidelity in Maryland during the Revolution.

The Proprietary Government of South Carolina

In 1663 the Crown issued a charter giving eight peers title to land roughly encompassing present day North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The first English colonists at Port Royal, South Carolina, in 1670 brought with them the Lords Proprietors' Fundamental Constitutions of Carolina which dictated the governmental/social/judicial organization of the colony. The composition of the Constitutions has been attributed to Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of Shaftsbury, who as Palatine, i.e. eldest Proprietor, and philosopher John Locke, then his secretary. It envisioned in this raw wilderness that was being populated by adventurers, religious dissenters and settlers an "ideal" society that was to be based on landed aristocracy. Each Proprietor would have in Carolina an appointed counterpart, a Landgrave, who would be colonial nobility and would possess 48,000 acres. The other social classes would be Cacciques (second rank nobility each of whom would have 24,000 acres), Lords of Manor (12,000 acres), freemen, leetmen - similar to medieval serfs - and slaves. This experiment in government and social planning lasted until 1718.

The Huguenots

From 1560 until 1596 France was torn by civil wars that involved three factions: the Huguenots (Protestants) who followed the intellectual leadership of Calvin, the Catholics, and the Nationalists. The most scarring event of this bitter three-way war was the Massacre of St. Bartholemew's in 1572: thousands of Huguenots were butchered in Paris and then throughout France.

When Henry of Navarre, himself a Protestant, came to the throne in 1594 as Henry IV, he brought peace to the weary realm by converting to Catholicism, the religion of the masses. In 1598 the Edict of Nantes was promulgated: it recognized Catholicism as the state religion but made generous guarantees to the Huguenots for religious and civil freedom. In 1685 in the reign of Louis XIV the Edict of Revocation made Protestantism illegal. To escape persecution several hundred thousand Huguenots sought refuge in the Protestant countries of Europe and in the American colonies. Those who remained in France went underground until 1787 when, shortly before the outbreak of the French Revolution, the Edict of Toleration restored their rights.

Daniell

The first immigrants who arrived in South Carolina from England in March 1670 were soon followed by more experienced colonists who emigrated from New England, Virginia and Barbados. The coat-of-arms of Robert Daniell who was born in England in 1646 is identified in Burke's General Armory of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales as being that of the Daniell family of co. Gloucester. According to Baldwin's First Settlers in South Carolina, Robert Daniell visited the colony in 1677 from Barbados. He may have had relatives there since a book on Barbadian wills and administrations for 1639-80 lists fourteen Daniells in the index. On 3 June 1678 a warrant was issued for the survey of a lot for him at Oyster Point (Charles Towne, later Charleston). He returned to Charleston on the Mary the following spring to make his permanent home in South Carolina.

A number of Barbadian emigrants settled at Goose Creek in St. John's Berkeley (Berkeley County) northwest of Charleston. These men who were an influential political clique were known as "The Goose Creek Men." The incomplete records of the Commons House of Assembly show that Robert Daniell served as representative from Berkeley in 1706, 1712 and 1713. In the 1680's there was a general uprising against tyrannical Governor Colleton which culminated in his expulsion from the colony. Men not included in the general pardon issued by the Proprietors in 1692 were Robert Daniell and James Moore, both of whom later were governors of the colony.

In 1698 Robert Daniell made a trip to England, probably on one of his own ships, where he, who had been excluded from the general pardon, helped the Proprietors revise the Fundamental Constitutions which they sent with him when he returned to Charleston. The Proprietors also conferred on him the title Landgrave without purchase (patent dated 12 August 1698) and delegated to him and Governor/Landgrave Morton the authority of approving applicants for the title of Landgrave by purchase: one of the changes in the Constitutions was the proviso that residents of Carolina could purchase the title.

In 1703 after England declared war on France and Spain, Robert Daniell and Governor James Moore led an expedition against the Spanish in St. Augustine. The English forces captured the town but were unable to storm the castillo because naval support failed to arrive. In addition to being a colonel and commander Robert Daniell was a Chief Justice, Deputy Governor of North Carolina, Deputy Governor of South Carolina and in 1716-17 was one of the last governors before the collapse of the Proprietary Government.

Besides his property in St. John's Berkeley, Robert Daniell had many other land holdings. Winyah Barony in Georgetown County to which he received title 19 June 1711 was part of the 48,000 acres that came to him with the title Landgrave. In one of the speediest major land transactions of the period he sold it the following day to Landgrave Thomas Smith. Another segment of his Landgrave property was the 3,020 acre Port Royal Island, now called Parris Island, which he deeded to Edward Archer of Barbados in 1701. In 1714 he sold 2,027 acres in Colleton County and 1220 acres in Granville County. Besides being a planter, Robert Daniell had shipping interests. His vessals included The Daniell of South Carolina, Dorothy, Mary, Martha and Robert.

In d'Angerville's Living Descendants of Blood Royal (II: Wilson) the ancestral line of Robert Daniell's first wife, Dorothy Chamberlayne, the mother of his son, Robert Daniell, Jr. (II), is shown to go back to Edward III through the latter's son, Edmund, Duke of York, and his wife, Isabella. The details of her lineage are given on a chart in York Lowry Wilson's A Carolina-Virginia Genealogy. In 1711 Dorothy (Chamberlayne) Daniell made a Deed of Gift of seven slaves to her grandson, Marmaduke, "the youngest son of my son Robert Daniell and Sarah, his wife." According to Notitia Parochia of St. Philip's Parish, "October 16, 1711, then departed this life Colo Daniels lady."

By 1714 Robert Daniell had married Martha Wainwright by whom he had four children. After his death she married Col. George Logan. Close ties existed between the Daniell and Logan families. At his death Robert Daniell (I) was buried at the original edifice of historic St. Philip's in Charleston which has been called the Mother Church of South Carolina. According to Smith in "The Baronies of South Carolina," South Carolina Historical and Genealogical Magazine (1912), when his tomb was discovered in 1908 the Colonial Dames of America arranged the reinterment of his remains with those of other members of the Daniell and Logan families. The slab on the vault has the following inscription:

HERE LIE THE REMAINS

HONBLE ROBERT DANIELL

The will of Sarah Daniell, widow, dated 1721, named her sons Robert (III) and Marmaduke and stated that the latter was the younger and under 21. This will also made reference to arrangements between herself and Marmaduke's tutor for her son's schooling in England.

A major source of information on the Daniell genealogy is Robert de Treville Lawrence's article, "Family Bibles of Lawrence Brothers of Charleston," printed in The South Carolina Historical Magazine in 1952. The family Bible record that was started by Jonathan Lawrence (III), an emigrant from New York who in 1777 married the great-great granddaughter of Robert Daniell (I), omitted Robert Daniell, Jr. (II). This record was compiled about 60 years after the death of the latter. The wills of Robert (I) and Sarah, the widow of Robert (II), indicate that Robert (II) predeceased his father. The death sequence also accounts for the fact that Robert (III) was the second Landgrave, a title held for only a short time for the system was soon abolished.

The will of Robert Daniell (III), who died 1732, was reminiscent of his mother's will in that it specifically provided that his son, Robert Daniell (IV), was to have "the best schooling my estate can afford."

Robert Daniell (IV) (1724-89), according to Stub Entries to Indents, Book B, contributed £7,425 as well as port, rice, 3,000 pounds of beef and forage to the Revolutionists. When his daughter, Sarah, married Jonathan Lawrence in 1777, the newspaper notice gave her residence as Daniell's Island.

In his will, Robert Daniell (IV) bequeathed to his wife, Elizabeth, his plantation at Cainhoy and a lot in the Ansonborough section of Charleston. He directed that in event of his death his executors were to build for her a house on this lot. According to a history of the house that was published in The Charleston News and Courier, 15 May 1972, a two and a half story Georgian house was constructed at 8 Georgia Street following his death. This house, the oldest on Georgia Street, was conveyed to his daughter, Sarah (Daniell) Lawrence, the widow of Jonathan Lawrence, in 1791 for 333 pounds, 6 shillings and 8 pence sterling. In 1817 Sarah conveyed this property to her son-in-law, Samuel Parker, for $4,000 with the proviso that it was his for his lifetime and then would revert to his and his wife's children or their heirs. It remained in the Parker trust estate through Civil War. In 1871, the three daughters of Samuel and Elizabeth Helena (Lawrence) Parker who by then were married and living in other states sold their shares to relatives who held it briefly. The house, scheduled for demolition in the 1960's to make way for the construction of apartments on that site, became a matter of public concern. The Ansonborough Project of Historical Charleston Foundation succeeded in having it designated as one of a number of houses in that area for restoration. A bronze plaque on the house identifies it as "House of Sarah Lawrence c 1790."

Logan

Colonel George Logan (d 1720), an officer in the English army, emigrated from Alberdeen, Scotland, in 1690. He commanded a regiment in the expedition against the Spanish in St. Augustine in 1703. Colonel Logan was an original landowner of lots in Charleston, Beaufort and Willtown (New London). According to his will he owned the plantation Weeahoe. At the time of his death he was living on his plantation at Thomas' Island. From 1703-07 he was Public Receiver (Treasurer) of the Province and for a number of years, beginning in 1702, he was elected to serve in the Commons House of Assembly from Berkeley County. In 1716 he was speaker of the Lower House. He was in 1712 one of the commissioners for the first free school in Charleston. In the early eighteenth century Charleston, very dependent on shipping trade, was beset with piracy. After the capture of notorious Major Stede Bonnet and other pirates, Colonel Logan in 1718 was one of the judges in their trial.

Parker

By his first wife, whose name is not known, Joseph Parker, a goldsmith of Charleston, had four sons and one daughter. All the sons lived in Charleston but Hannah, after her marriage, moved to Delaware. The sons were Benjamin, George, John and Samuel.

Samuel, ca 1768-1830, and Elizabeth Helena (Lawrence) Parker's children were Elizabeth Rachel Pilot of Augusta, Georgia; Susan Mary Frierson of Colony, Texas; Sarah Lawrence Marcell of West Liberty, Ohio; and Samuel Daniell Parker of Charleston. The names of the three out-of-state sisters are on a Deed of Conveyance recorded in Charleston County, dated 1871, from Sarah L. Marcel, et al., to E. M. L. Miller and George G. L. Parker.

Burdell

The 1685 Revocation of the Edict of Nantes which ninety years earlier had guaranteed religious freedom to French Protestants was followed by a wave of emigration from France. One of the Huguenot refugees who arrived in Carolina in 1689 was Dr. Jacob Burdell (Bourdelle). His marriage to Elizabeth Carriere, daughter of Jean Carriere, on 18 February 1713/14 was recorded at St. Thomas and St. Dennis Parish Church.

John Burdell of Orangeburg Township, St. Matthew's Parish Berkeley County, on 17 April 1748 married his second wife, Elizabeth McGregor, at St. Thomas and St. Dennis Parish Church. Before the Battle of Eutaw Springs, the Continental Army gathered at his plantation. In 1781, 1782 and 1783 he furnished sundries to the Continental and State Troops (Stub Entries to Indents, Book U-W). John and Elizabeth (McGregor) Burdell's daughter Susanna's descendants married descendants of early Carolina settlers from Britain (Daniell and Logan); John, Jr.'s descendants intermarried with descendants of early Huguenot refugees (Marion, Mazyck and Ravenel).

Carrier

In 1679 a petition was made to Charles II to provide transport to Carolina for 80 Huguenot families whose experience would enable them to develop wine, silk and oil in the colony. The Lords Proprietors, recognizing the profitability of such a venture, recommended that these "poor gentlemen" refugees were worthy of the king's largesse. Their communication which also referred to the group as the "first foreigners" in Carolina indicates that these were the first Huguenot settlers in the colony.

John (Jean) Carriere, a cooper from Montivilliers, Normandy, was in the first contingent of 45 Huguenots who sailed for Carolina in December 1679 on the frigate Richmond. The Assembly in Carolina demonstrated extreme hostility to the French refugees who were considered to be aliens not entitled to rights and privileges of citizenship. In 1696 Jean Carriere was one of the 63 Huguenots who petitioned for naturalization; this was granted by the Act of 1696-97. According to St. Julien R. Childs, the facts that the "St. Julien List of Petitioners" showed Jean Carriere as a resident of the Santee and that records indicate that he had land grants totalling about 400 acres suggest that he probably eventually became a planter.

Witten

Peter Witten (1731-87), owner of Liberty Hill and Morefield plantation which was located about 40 miles inland from Charleston, died before his daughter, Elizabeth/Eliza Mary, was born. His will named his wife, Susanna (Burdell); father, Thomas; son, Peter Robert, and "possible unborn child or children." Peter Robert Witten, who inherited Morefield Plantation, died from burns inflicted when the home burned. In his will he left all his estate to his sister Elizabeth Frierson and her husband, John Frierson, with the proviso that should John outlive Elizabeth the property was to be his for the remainder of his life, "then in Trust to pay and apply said income for the maintenance, education and support of the issue of the body of my said sister until one of such issue reaches the age of 21." To carry out the provisions of this will John and Elizabeth Frierson did on May 22, 1819 execute in writing an agreement to this effect. This document provides proof that Elizabeth/Eliza Mary (Witten) Frierson was the "unborn child" named in the will of their father, Peter Witten.

In his will Peter Witten provided "1/2 acre to be laid off around old burying ground on my plantation Morefield to be reserved for families of Whittens and McKelveys to remain for that purpose from generation to generation." The cemetery which was located northwest of Pinopolis was flooded in 1941 as part of the Santee-Cooper Hydroelectric Project. The resevoir formed by the Pinopolis Dam is now known as Lake Moultrie. Before the flooding all the graves with tombstones not obliterated or destroyed were moved to higher ground. Of the persons named in these charts, Eliza (Witten) Frierson was the only one whose grave was moved.

Stub Entries of Indents, Book D shows that Peter Witten supplied provisions and forage to North and South Carolina Militia 1780-83.

Frierson

Mouzon's 1775 map shows four "Fryerson" locations along the Santee River. The Frierson line that is traced in this record lived on the south side of the river about 13 miles north of Monck's Corner. The names and dates of the immigrant of this Frierson line have not been ascertained. The lineage of this family to an unusual extent is traced through a series of legal documents: a marriage contract, wills, records of land transactions and guardianship papers.

John Frierson (1747-91) was seven years old or younger when his father died. This is deduced from the fact that his god-father, Francis Murrill, a man of considerable wealth, in 1754 left his estate to the young boy ("son of Mrs. Elizabeth Frierson") for whom a guardian was appointed. This guardian, William Moultrie, was later general in the Revolutionary War and twice governor of South Carolina. Elizabeth (Richbourg?) Frierson between 1756 at which time she signed a Warranty Deed to James McKelvey et al as Trustees (it was not recorded until 1819) and 1777 married John Little. Her will, dated 1777 and proved in 1791, was in the name of Elizabeth Little. In it she left sums of money to her sons, John and Philip Frierson, and to John's daughter, Ann. The remainder of her estate was willed to Philip's heirs. In 1777 John Frierson was elected to the First Colonial Congress and after independence from Great Britain was a member of the First Carolina Legislature. During the Revolution he supplied provision and forage to the Revolutionary forces (Stub Entries to Indents, Book S). In 1775 he married Mary (Polly Waine) Davis, daughter of Reverend William Davis.

John Frierson (1777-1833) married Mary Mouzon by whom he had two daughters and after her death he married Eliza Mary (Elizabeth) Witten (1787-1821) by whom he had nine children. This John Frierson, a planter like his father and grandfather, in the tradition of the day spent part of the year in Charleston.

Some of the children of John and Eliza Mary (Witten) Frierson emigrated to Haynesville, Alabama, where John Witten Frierson died. In his will he directed his brothers, Dr. George Phillip Frierson and Charles Davis Frierson, to divide his worldly goods equally among his siblings. They then continued with their families to the delta country (De Soto and Caddo Parishes) of Louisiana. The plantation, Ravenswood, on Bayou Pierre near the village of Frierson, Louisiana, is still owned by descendants of Dr. Frierson. After the Civil War which depleted his fortune, he and part of his large family - by two wives he had 15 children - moved to Honduras where they remained for several years.

Charles Davis Frierson (1817-72) and his family including his daughter, Julia Lawrence Frierson, who was born in De Soto Parish in 1856, moved to Colony, Texas, where he acquired a ranch which today, 125 years later, is owned by his grandson, John.

The Scotch-Irish

The entity of the Scotch-Irish (Scotch who lived in Ulster, Ireland in the 17th century and who immigrated to America in the 18th) was the result of the English Crown's efforts from the time of the Anglo-Norman invasion in the 12th century to subdue the Irish. After the failure of Elizabeth I's scheme to abolish Catholicism in Ireland by driving the Irish from their homes and giving their lands to Protestant Englishmen, James I devised a new plantation system involving private enterprise. The Irish were forcibly evicted from Ulster and their lands were granted to powerful London companies, guilds and individuals on condition that they obtained English and Scotch settlers. Thousands of Scots whose land was rocky and deforested and who lived in conditions of poverty and religious oppression settled in Ulster. There they achieved impressive prosperity by farming, raising sheep and, with the help of Huguenots in Ireland, developing a wool and linen manufacturing industry.

With the enactment of the Test Act in 1703, the Scotch-Irish in Ulster experienced new religious oppression. The Wool Act of 1699 prohibited the export of Ulster woolen goods because they were a threat to the English woolen industry. Coinciding with these severe curbs there were three years of disasterous droughts and winter frosts that resulted in famine. The final screw that was tightened on the Scots in Ulster was "rack-rent," the demand by landlords of double price for renewing leases. The Scotch-Irish were faced with the choice of returning to the hopelessness of Scotland or facing the uncertainty of America. About 5,000 left Ulster in the first Scotch-Irish immigration of 1716-18. On receipt of favorable reports, especially from Pennsylvania where farming conditions were promising and religious freedom was guaranteed, a second wave of immigration took place 1725-29. The number of immigrants was so great that Parliament became alarmed but it was too late: the exodus of the Scotch-Irish from Ulster continued until interrupted by the American Revolution. By that time over 200,000 Scotch-Irish had come to America.

The immigrant Scotch-Irish were neither Scotch nor Irish: many families had been away from Scotland for 100-60 years. The memory of homeland that they brought with them to America was not of Scotland but of Ulster.

The majority of these Scotch-Irish settled in Pennsylvania, particularly in Lancaster county. The colonial government became disturbed at the great influx of Scotch-Irish many of whom did not pay for their land. Fortuitously in Virginia the government was in need of settlers who could secure the western frontier against Indians. Governor Gooch made land grants to William Beverly (118,491 acres) and William Bordon (92,000 acres). One of the stipulations to Bordon was that he must have 100 families settled on the land before he could receive title. Thus, the Scotch-Irish of Pennsylvania had warm encouragement to settle in the Valley of Virginia (Shenandoah Valley). Another favorable factor was that the Valley was not inhabited by Indians: it was used by them as a seasonal hunting ground for buffalo.

The first families who moved into present day Augusta County in 1733 were those of John Campbell, Gilbert Christian, James Kerr and John Lewis. By 1738-39 at which time the Beverly and Bordon patents were proved a number of other Scotch-Irish families had settled in the Valley around modern Staunton and in counties to the south. These included several who, sooner or later, intermarried with the Campbells and Wallaces: Woods, Preston, Tate, Patton, Christian, Hamilton, Craig, Thompson, Buchanan, Baker and others.

A third major immigration in 1740-41 from Ulster bypassed Pennsylvania where the choice lands were already occupied and headed for the Valley of Virginia and beyond. Ultimately the concentration of Scotch-Irish extended in a great arc from Lancaster and Chester counties southwesterly through the Valley of Virginia to the Piedmont of North and South Carolina.

Historians have commented on the restlessness of the Scotch-Irish settlers. Many first and second generation settlers sold their holdings to newcomer immigrants and by 1770 had moved to Washington, Wythe and other counties to the west. One of the main reasons was that, at a time when wealth was in land, their original property when divided among several children left each heir with limited acreage. After the American Revolution the Scotch-Irish moved through the Cumberland Gap into Kentucky and Tennessee and by the 1820's into the area from Ohio to Missouri from which points they disbursed in many directions and melted into the mainstream of American life.

The Scotch-Irish were true frontiersmen who fought actively in the Indian Wars and wholeheartedly in the Revolutionary War. General William Campbell, commander at the Battle of King's Mountain, was a great-grandson of John Campbell and the brother-in-law of Patrick Henry. Between them, immigrants John Campbell and Elizabeth (Woods) Wallace had 24 descendants who fought in the American Revolution. The same proportionate participation was probably true of most Scotch-Irish families.

Buchanan

James Buchanan and his wife, Jean (Sayers) Buchanan were born and married in Ireland. Their three known children - John, Margaret and Martha - also were born in Ireland. In 1736, James, his wife and son immigrated to Northcumberland County, Pennsylvania, where James died ten years later. John emigrated to Augusta County, Virginia, where he was closely associated with his cousins, Alexander and William Sayers. John, who eventually had the rank of colonel in the colonial wars, his future brother-in-law, Captain Charles Campbell, and two others under the command of his future father-in-law, Captain James Patton, were the first white men of record to explore the Holston River area of Southwest Virginia. In 1747, John and his mother moved to that area where she soon died. Col. John sent to Ireland for his two sisters who immigrated to Virginia and settled on farms he had set aside for them. Margaret married Captain Campbell and Martha married her cousin, Captain John Buchanan.

According to some writers, James Buchanan was the son of William Buchanan of co. Tyrone, Ireland and was the cousin of the great-grandfather of James Buchanan, President of the United States.

Campbell

John Campbell (1676-1741), who was born near Londonderry, Ireland, in 1726 immigrated to America with his wife, Grace Hay, seven of their children, the latters' spouses and children to Pennsylvania where they settled at the township of Donegal in Chester (now Lancaster) County. There he was an original landowner and a member of the Pennsylvania Provincial Council. In Augusta County, Virginia, where the family moved in 1733, he and his sons were original landowners in the Beverly Patent.

The second to sixth generation descendants of John and Grace (Hay) Campbell included one member of the Virginia House of Burgesses, two members of the Virginia House of Delegates, the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, governors of Virginia and Tennessee, two Treasurers of the United States, a U.S. senator from South Carolina, a president of the University of South Carolina, a Minister to France, and generals in the American Revolution and in both the Union and Confederate armies in the Civil War. Altogether eight descendants held the foregoing offices and military ranks. Five female descendants of the same period were wives of men who also held multiple offices: two governors of Virginia, a governor of South Carolina and a governor of Tennessee, a U.S. Secretary of War, a U.S. senator from South Carolina, a U.S. congressman from Virginia and three Confederate Army generals.

While the Campbells lived in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, Patrick Campbell (1696-1772) operated a tavern and trading post and served as the first elected constable. He outfitted and often provided food and housing for travelers heading into the Indian territory. He traded manufactured goods with Indians for furs. When the family moved to Augusta County he obtained one of the largest tracts (1546 acres) in the Beverly Patent.

Capt. Charles Campbell (1715-67), who was 11 years old when the Campbells emigrated from Ireland, served in the Viginia militia and fought in the French and Indian Wars. He and five others from Augusta County are believed to have been the first white men to have explored the Holston River area to which the Campbells emigrated in the 1770's.

Craig

Captain John Craig (ca 1740-1808) married Molly Cox before 1761 and died in Wythe County, Virginia. He was in the Battle of King's Mountain in the Revolutionary War.

Lt. Col. Hiram Craig (1772-1842), who married Maria (Polly) Mitchell Tate (1774-1828), served in the 11th Virginia Fusillers in the War of 1812. There are no records in the National Archives of the Virginia soldiers in the War of 1812. According to the Wallace Papers in the Missouri Historical Society, his commission which was in the possession of Dr. John S. Wallace's brother was burned in a fire.

Hiram Craig was a surveyor and as such surveyed six or seven of the western counties of Virginia. About 1816 he and his family moved to Missouri where they were among the first emigrants. In 1820 the State of Missouri appointed him commissioner to lay out and organize Chariton County which by new statute was to extend from the Missouri River to the Iowa line. He was the first presiding judge of Chariton County. He owned and farmed extensive property, one large tract now being part of the City of St. Louis.

On Sundays neighbors gathered at the Craig home for religious services. According to documents of the period in the absence of an ordained minister he performed the marriage ceremony. Hiram and Maria (Tate) Craig's daughter, Mary Jane Craig, married Jonothon Burch and died in 1830 at age 28 leaving three small children. One of these, Mary Jane Burch, was raised in the home of her grandfather, Hiram, then a widower, by her young aunt, Idress Craig, who was at that time only 16 or 17 years old.

Parks

James Parks and his wife, Mary (Fulton) Parks, were early settlers in the Buffalo Settlement in Prince Edward County, Virginia. They were leaders, with the Wallaces, in the Buffalo Presbyterian Church. Their daughter, Catherine, was related to the Alexander family. George Selden Wallace in his book on The Descendants of Peter Wallace and Elizabeth Woods wrote that Catherine was related to Margaret Parks who married her cousin Archibald Alexander. Archibald and Margaret Alexander were the grandparents of Dr. Archibald Alexander of Princeton University.

The children of Mary Fulton Parks named in her will dated in 1774 in Prince Edward County were: Ezekiel, Joseph, Margaret Watson, Mary Hanna, Catherine Wallace and James. The will also named son-in-laws Douglas Watson and Andrew Wallace. Joseph Parks was a Trustee of Hampden-Sidney College.

Snoddy

According to family legend when Claverhouse was sent from England to Scotland ca 1675 to crush Presbyterianism he captured a member of the sect name Fergus who, knowing that he faced certain death, arranged to break jail. A heavy snow aided his escape and he, needing an alias, took the name Snow-day. In America the spelling evolved into Snoddy. The name of the first immigrant of this family is not known.

John Snoddy (1740-1814) of Washington County, Virginia, fought in the Battle of King's Mountain in the American Revolution. He attained the rank of captain in the Virginia militia and later was colonel in both Virginia and Kentucky militia. He married Margaret Walker and moved first to North Carolina then in the 1780's to Madison County, Kentucky, where his family was among the first permanent settlers and where he remained the rest of his life. In 1774/75 Daniel Boone's wife and children lived at Snoddy's Station on the Clinch River while Daniel and a crew of 30 men were constructing the Wilderness Road into Kentucky. In 1781 Boone filed for 1,000 acres for Snoddy in Kentucky. When Madison County, Kentucky, was created in 1786, John Snoddy was its first Commissioner of Peace and Oyer and Terminer (Judge for hearing and determining trial cases for Superior Court). In 1789-91 he was county sheriff and in 1804 was appointed Commissioner of Revenue Taxes.

In Wallace Family and Allied Branches, a collection by Dr. John Snoddy Wallace (1849-1916) that is at the Missouri Historical Society, there is an account of the kidnapping of Libby Snoddy, the two year old daughter of John and Margaret (Walker) Snoddy, by Wyandot (Heron) Indians during a raid in Kentucky. Col. Snoddy and his neighbors followed these Indians through Indiana for many days before they lost the trail. Libby was adopted by the chief of the Wyandot tribe and his squaw. Because the small child, distressed at being separated from her family, often cried for her brother (?), Walker Snoddy, the Indians came to call her by the name Walker. When a treaty was made with the Wyandots the U.S. Commission directed their removal from Michigan to Wyandot, Kansas. Col. Snoddy accompanied the Commission to Michigan and there found his daughter who by then was a grown woman married to the son of the chief. He tried to persuade her to come home but she who had become a member of the tribe in every way except her fair complexion refused to return to Kentucky with her father. She and her husband who also took the name Walker were the ancestors of the Walkers of the Wyandot tribe. One of their sons, William Walker, was territorial governor of Kansas and Nebraska. In 1858 Anna (Snoddy) Wallace (1778-1861) spent two weeks with her younger sister, Libby, and brother-in-law at the ranch they owned near Leavenworth, Kansas, and returned home with many stories of Libby's life experiences.

Tate

John Tate (1722-1801) came from Ireland to Pennsylvania and in 1744 moved from there to Augusta County, Virginia. Although in his 50's at the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, he served as a volunteer as did his five sons: Thomas, James, Robert, John and William. At the Battle of Guilford Courthouse, Captain James Tate, well in advance of his troops, was mortally wounded. He was buried in the Guilford Courthouse National Cemetery.

Lt. Thomas Tate (1743-1833), who married Jean/Jane Campbell, the sister of General William Campbell, was in the company that was under the command of his brother-in-law at the Battle of King's Mountain. Most of the men in the company were from Bethel or Tinkling Spring Presbyterian Churches. After King's Mountain some returned home and others including Lt. Tate remained with General Campbell in order to join General Green near Guilford Courthouse, North Carolina. This small group that continued in service took hundreds of prisoners at Cowpens then they, too, disbanded. They were immediately recalled because of Cornwallis' threat to invade Virginia.

Thomas Tate had extensive business dealings in Augusta County. According to 1795 survey he owned 1594 acres in the rich Holston River Valley. The courts appointed him to be a road overseer and in 1780 he was commissioner of the Specific Tax List.

Walker

John Walker (d 1734), born in Wigton, Scotland, on 7 January 1702 married Katherine Rutherford, daughter of John and Isabelle (Allein) Rutherford who lived on the River Tweed. He, his family and parents-in-law moved to County Down in Ireland where the latter died when in their 80's. John Walker, his wife, children and three nephews immigrated together to the colonies in 1726/28 and settled in Chester County, Pennsylvania. Several years later with other Scotch-Irish from Chester County he made an exploratory trip to Rockbridge County, Virginia, where he selected property and made plans for relocating his family there. Before he could make the move he died. He and Katherine (d 1738) were both buried at Nottingham Meeting House in Chester County. In the 1730's most of the eleven Walker children and their families emigrated to Rockbridge and Augusta Counties in Virginia.

Joseph Walker (1722-1806), who was born in Ireland and died in Jessamine County, Kentucky, served as a private in Captain Snead's Company in 1776 and was a justice of Rockbridge County 1778-81. In 1749 he married his first wife, Nancy McClung.

Wallace

The Wallace line can be traced with certainty only to Peter Wallace who was born in Scotland about 1680 and who moved to Ireland where he married Elizabeth Woods. No evidence has been found to support the claim that he was descended from the brother of Sir William Wallace, the great Scottish hero. The origin of the family was probably in Wales and the name may have evolved from Walyes to Wallace.

Elizabeth (Woods) Wallace (b 1682), the immigrant head of family of this line, was a sixth generation descendant of Adam Loftus, Archbishop of Dublin and Armagh, Lord Chancellor of Ireland 1581-1605, and co-founder of Trinity College. It is mainly through her that descent is traced from the Magna Charta Barons and from most of the European lines herein to Hiram Craig Wallace (1841-1922). After the death of her husband, Peter, in Ireland, she came to Pennsylvania in 1724 with five of their children (one is believed to have remained in Ireland) whose ages ranged from 5 to 18 and with probably all of her four brothers - Michael, James, William and Andrew Woods - and their families. The extended Woods-Wallace family first settled in Lancaster County then moved to Virginia. Michael Woods acquired land on the eastern slope of the Blue Ridge Mountains not far from present day Charlottesville and Elizabeth lived about two miles away. Nothing is known about her personal life or where she was buried. Fifteen grandsons and one great-grandson of Peter and Elizabeth (Woods) Wallace fought in the American Revolution.

Samuel Wallace (1709-1800), who was born in Ireland, immigrated with the Woods-Wallace families in 1724 to Pennsylvania. Records show that on 20 September 1748 he was granted a patent for 2017 acres of land at Buffalo area of Amelia County (later Prince Edward), Virginia. He married Esther Baker of nearby Cub Creek. About 1772, they moved to Charlotte County, Virginia. They were the parents of several children including Rev. Judge Caleb Wallace, a graduate of Princeton and a prominent early settler of Tennessee, whose correspondence with his classmate, President Madison, is preserved in the Library of Congress.

Major Andrew Wallace (1748-1829) served for three years in the American Revolution. In 1782 he, his wife, children and parents moved to Stanford County, Kentucky, where they settled at Buffalo Creek. Andrew participated in the erection and early administration of the Buffalo Presbyterian Church which is still being used for services. Andrew was the first cousin twice removed of Lt. William A. Wallace (great-grandson of Peter Wallace, Jr.) whose colorful career in the Texas Rangers and the Mexican War made him famous in Texas folklore as Big Foot Wallace.

Samuel Wallace (1770-1852) of the third Kentucky generation, married Anna, the daughter of Colonel John and Mary (Walker) Snoddy. In 1819, they and their eight children including William Jackson Wallace, who was then seven years old, moved to Howard County, Missouri, where they were among the first settlers.

About 1838, William Jackson Wallace (1812-1887) and a slave his father had given him settled in what was then Indian Territory in Missouri where they built a cabin. Two years later when this area was opened for settlement he could not file on this land because of having occupied it too early. He filed on it in behalf of his recently widowed sister who thus became the first white landowner in Medicine Township in Livingston County. William acquired the adjacent property for himself. In 1840, he married Mary Jane Burch, daughter of Jonothon T. and Mary Jane (Craig) Burch. The first religious service in the county was held in their home which for several years continued to be the Sunday meeting place for all denominations. In this period the Methodist Church, more than any sect, assumed leadership in providing circuit rider preachers for remote pioneer communities. It was probably a result of this that the Wallaces and other families of Scotch-Irish Presbyterian descent converted to Methodism. By Mary Jane who died in 1859 at age 37, William had eight children. Subsequently he married Elizabeth Zielah William by whom he had four more children. He and many members of his family are buried in the Wallace Cemetery at Chula which he gave to the public.

Hiram Craig Wallace (1841-1922), the eldest son of Mary Jane (Burch) and William Jackson Wallace, was 20 years old and in school at the outbreak of the Civil War. He joined Gen. Sterling Price's command of Missouri Confederate Troops and was assigned to Capt. Small's Company K of Hughes Regiment. Two weeks later they captured a garrison of 3500 Union troops in the Battle of Lexington. He then joined Capt. Churchill Clark's Artillery Company and participated in the battles of Pea Ridge (Elkhorn), Luka and Corinth in Northern Mississippi. In 1863 his company volunteered to accompany Gen. Van Dorn's cavalry and moved into Tennessee where they attacked two gun boats and seven transports of Union cavalry and infantry on the Tennessee River. Three of his eight man gun crew were killed and he and one other were wounded. The bullet which entered on his left-side cut through his shoulder blade in its exit. He was left with a family in that area who gave him medical attention until he recovered. During his convalescence Vicksburg fell and he was cut off from his company. He walked alone from Pulaski, Tennessee, to Columbus, Mississippi, through Union lines to rejoin his company. He saw active service until the end of the war.

Following a short stay at home after the war, Hiram moved to Columbus, Texas, where he worked in the building trade for six years after which he was a building contractor at Schulenberg, Texas, for seven years. During an illness Julia Lawrence Frierson was his nurse. They married after his recovery.

Two of their eight children were born in Schulenberg. The family moved to Rockdale where he owned a retail lumber yard. A third child was born there. Word of the new town, Kyle, being built on the railroad south of Austin reached him. In early 1881 he was on the first train to carry passengers over the Colorado River, his destination being Kyle. He purchased a site for his business, returned to Rockdale, loaded his merchandise in five box cars and moved his young family and business to this new location. There were two lumber yards, the H.C. Wallace Lbr. Co. and the Thompson Lbr. Co., that arrived in Kyle at about the same time. In a few years they consolidated and started another lumber business in Lockhart, Texas. Later, when they dissolved partnership, H.C. Wallace chose the Kyle yard which he managed, except for a short period in Big Spring, Texas, for the rest of his life. During his lifetime the business was expanded to include three other Central Texas lumber businesses. The Kyle lumber yard, still in business today after 101 years, remained under family management or ownership until 1973. Five more children were born to this couple in Kyle.

Hiram Craig Wallace and his wife were active in the Methodist Church, community affairs and many civic organizations. She was noted for her energy and ability to lead the fund raising drives that paid for church building. Every Tuesday she sent homemade bread to many Kyle families. In the years when Kyle had no doctor she took care of the ill and served as midwife, always without pay. They raised and educated eight children. Also making their home with them were Julia's widowed mother who was an invalid, the orphan son of neighbors, and, following the death of her parents, one of Hiram's half sisters. Some of their great-great-grandchildren make Kyle their home today.

APPENDIX D: BUCHANAN

The ancestry William Buchanan of county Tyrone, Ireland, is well documented. The descendants of James Buchanan and his wife, Jean (Sayers) Buchanan, of Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, are also well known and proven. No published documentation has been found that conclusively and unquestionably proves James Buchanan was the son of William of Tyrone. Sworn documents and both direct and inferring statements exist that substantiate this relationship.

The Buchanan Vertical File at the Historical Society of York County, Pennsylvania, contains copies of the following documents:

Wells, Milton H. Buchanan, an 11 page manuscript

Buchanan, L. D. The Buchanan Name and Pedigree Since 715 A.D. a 2 page undocumented manuscript

Buchanan. Sworn Depositions and Manuscripts Based on Family Bible Records Predating 1850. Mimeographed, 1930's

Newspaper articles concerning Clan Buchanan's ownership of real estate

Wells writes that in the 1920's a New York City land title was found to possibly rest in the Clan Buchanan of America. James Buchanan, President of the United States and head of the Clan Buchanan in America, stated it was possible the Clan had a valid claim to large holdings. The Wells manuscript further reports an interview in 1931 with L. D. Buchanan, at that time head of the Clan Buchanan of America, in his home in Houston, Texas, in which this claim was substantiated and historical background given. The newspaper articles parallel these statements.

These revelations encouraged many Buchanan descendants to present sworn depositions of heirship to the Clan's attorneys. This was not a scheme to swindle the gullible as no money was ever sought from the descendants. However, it is a fact that these depositions were given in the hope of monetary reward. They must, in the same light, be accepted as having been given with full anticipation of their being challenged and scrutinized in a court of law. One deposition given on March 14, 1933 by Fitzhugh L. Buchanan before Notary Public W. W. Pressley of Dickerson County, Virginia, stated that Col. John Buchanan was the grandson of William Buchanan of county Tyrone, Ireland. (It is known that Col. John was the son of James who died in 1747 in Pennsylvania.) John Chalkey Buchanan of Darwin, Virginia, and W. W. Holtsclaw of Jenkins, Kentucky, were among others who made similar depositions, stating they were based on family Bible records of relatives in North Carolina.

The manuscript by L. D. Buchanan states that William of county Tyrone, Ireland, was the grandfather of Col. John Buchanan and his sisters Martha and Margaret. (These were the children of James, d 1747, and his wife, Jean (Sayers) Buchanan.)

In addition to these written statements and sworn depositions indicating that James Buchanan, d 1747, was the son of William Buchanan of county Tyrone, Ireland, other papers have been found that infer the possibility of this relationship.

Judith Burkhardt of Berne, Indiana, has for years extensively researched the Buchanan line and has accumulated an immense file from her findings. In an undocumented manuscript filed with the Fort Wayne, Indiana, Public Library she writes that many of the Buchanans of Pennsylvania were from that family of Blairlusk, descending from sons of William of county Tyrone, Ireland, who came to Pennsylvania between 1724 and 1730. These sons were Robert, William, Arthur, Walter; and perhaps John, James and Thomas.

Clara Elliott Buchanan Rex in The Buchanans and Allied Families (see Bibliography) states that the descendants of William of Tyrone were in Cumberland, Pennsylvania. This is near present day Northumberland County.

Raymond Martin Bell in The Buchanan Family of Lewiston, Pa., Library of Congress, names, among others, James Buchanan, d 1747 in East Pennsborough, Pennsylvania, who may have been sons of William of Tyrone.

Note: Every entry in this publication has been carefully checked and fully documented. Sworn depositions form the basis for the connection shown between William of Tyrone and James, d 1747 in Pennsylvania. Due to the circumstances that surround the sworn documentation it is considered necessary to explain the family legends, and include the tentative "perhaps" and "may" (underlined above by this compiler) so as to leave a basis for those who follow to either prove or question in a creative manner. - CHY

INDEX OF EUROPEAN ANCESTORS

The alphabetization of European names is adapted from the arrangement in Webster's Biographical Dictionary. In general, before the Norman Conquest of 1066 AD, individuals had single names that were personalized by a number (Baldwin VI), place of origin (Adelaide of Burgundy), nickname (Charles the Bald), or prominent family line (Agnes of Beaumont). Because of the gradual adaptation of surnames in the late Middle Ages, names from that period are indexed under the surname (de Vere, Julianna or Vere, Julianna). As the Norman French came to be used less and less in England with the consolidation of the Conquest, the "de" and "le" were dropped from the names (de Wessington became Washington). On some charts several stages in the evolution of a family name are shown.
